Atkinson's Saturday Evening Post.

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER—DEVOTED TO NEWS, LITERATURE, SCIENCE, MORALITY, AGRICULTURE AND AMUSEMENT.

Vol. XI. Philadelphia, October 15, 1836. Whole No. 794.

The Merchant's Clerk.

Passages from the Diary of a late London Physician.

I called in the evening—according to the promise I had made to Mrs. Elliot—on her husband, to see how he bore the discovery of his wife's sudden departure.

"Poor fellow!" I inquired of the woman of the house, who opened the door. "Is he at home?"

"Why, sir," but it's a sad way, sir, indeed, Mrs. Elliot's gone, sir. He's a man in bed all day."

He was sitting at a table when I entered; with a solitary candle, and Mrs. Elliot's letter lying open before him.

"Oh, doctor, is not this worse than death?" he exclaimed. "Am I not left alone to be the prey of fiends?"

"Come, come, Mr. Elliot, undervale your feelings! Let this heavy misfortune be a trouble with the tender virtues—patience and resignation."

"Ah, doctor, doctor!" he said, "a man is fond lessen it!" he repeated vehemently, in a tone and with an air that quite startled me. "Here I am left alone—I have thus to be the sport of fiends, and I am!—What curse is there that has not fallen, or is likely soon to fall, on my devoted head?" he continued, gloomily, "that my Mary is from home, and I left to rest, to rest, to rest, and to otherwise. I feel—I know it! I have brought pain upon her heart, and she is now a wretched wife and a miserable woman! The curses are coming on me—the curses of the widow and the fatherless are heard in heaven! To-morrow, to-morrow, I will go there. The earth shall not fall upon her bosom, and look upon me! I will go there, shake the old man shake beside the grave to which my child has gone! There I will lie after her across

FOREIGN VARIETIES.

A considerable revolution in religious forms, it is said, is about to take place among the Catholics in Ireland. Already in several places the ceremony of mass has been performed in English.

A Moral Revolution.—Custom House oaths are explained in England, and a solemn affirmation used instead.

Monarchy.—The Duke of Northumberland has lately built no less than fourteen churches and chapels in Northumberland county alone.

The Queen.—General Church, formerly of Greece, is gone, it is said, to Timbuctoo.

Two of the steam coach-masters of Bristol, have at this time upwards of 100 horses laid up with the prevailing influenza.

Iron steamboats are coming into general use in Great Britain.

Cattle Steamboats.—Such are the profits obtained by the Scotch farmers of Inverness, Aberdeen, &c. since the introduction of their sheep and black cattle to London by steam, that it is proposed to have a line of coast steamboats entirely appropriated to that object.

Lady Blessington, it is said, calls her tedious visitors stay-waters—putting them in the corner line.

Agronomy.—A person in England advertises to procure animal manures, and to undertake also his profession by the above title.

Progress of Rail Road and Rail Steam Navigation.—Mr. Cockerill at his manufactory in England, is making 37 steam engines for the first root manufactures, and 30 steam carriages all for Russia.

No less than 11,000 men are at this moment employed on the London and Birmingham Rail Road.

The Inhabitants of the Law.—Two men at the Cambridge Assizes, escaped from the charge of stealing sheep, because the animals were not legged, or two year old ewes, not mentioned in the statute.

Corn (i. e. wheat) in Germany has already risen 30 per cent on the promised failure of the crops in the United States.

Female Daring.—A young lady at Prescot, near Liverpool, England, recently saved it is a paper building. It burst, but the miraculously escaped with her life.

Egyptian Hieroglyphic.—At the sale of Mr. Bebro's collection of Egyptian antiquities, the original roll in memory of Sir Isaac, a scribe of the temple of Pthah Soker, at Memphis, on one sheet of paper, made of the papyrus plant, one hundred feet in length, without a single join, nothing new under the sun! was bought for the British Museum for 120*l*.

There is to be a column of granite erected to the memory of Napoleon in the native town of Corsica. It is to be surmounted by a statue similar to that in the Place Vendome, at Paris. Louis Philippe and the Duke of Orleans head the subscription. The Council General of Corsica have voted 30,000 francs, and that of the Seine 5000 francs.

Strength of the Human Frame.—At the late anniversary of the opening of the Surrey Zoological Gardens, some amazing feats of strength were exhibited by two Frenchmen. One of them successfully resisted the united efforts of two horses to drag him from a platform on which he was living; and the other, while suspended by his feet from a cross beam raised into the air a horse of ordinary size.

Universal Language.—At a Scientific Congress now assembled at Liege, one of the subjects for discussion is the possibility of a universal language, as a consequence of Iron Rail Roads.

Potator Rare.—The Germans will now manufacture their favorite beverage in greater abundance and at a cheaper rate than ever. M. Balling, Professor of Chemistry at Prague, has succeeded in making an excellent Beer from Potatoes. It is the color of Wine, and is very strong, and very agreeable to the taste.

Rail Roads in England.—Agriculturers in England are beginning to turn their attention to the cultivation of best root, in consequence of the success which is understood to have attended the attempts to make sugar from it in France and elsewhere.

A new Discovery in the Circulation of the Blood.—Mr. Sable, a German naturalist, has found that there is a circulation of a sustaining fluid throughout the whole extent of the body of crabs of hemipterous insects; and that this circulation is altogether independent of the circulation of the dorsal vessel. The pulsation is chiefly in the upper part of the legs, and is sometimes intermittent. Currier supposed these insects had no circulation.

Austria is [illegible] a sanguinary [illegible] —it is about to be crowned King of Hungary, and has invited a select party to meet her Majesty at dinner; only thirty dinners are expected to sit down to table! This is a rehearsal of assuming the government of the Hungry people, and we hope they will show their gratitude by kicking up no rows although their Sovereign has taken plenty of jaw over it—for clear that his Majesty has great respect for their Diet.

A gentleman of Jersey is anxious to inform the people of England that if they will not accept the challenge of Ireland to produce a more beautiful woman than "the Maid of Rose," he will. He is ready to invite the maiden, and assigns to name a lady in Jersey who will come nearer to the standard of beauty as established by the Venus de Medici, than any other in the king's dominions.

A Remarkable Case.—A woman in London, whilst eating her dinner, was choked by a large piece of hard mutton lodging in the act of her propheum. Three hours thereafter, when in a state of suffocation, two drachms of a solution of 2 grains of Tartar Emetic, in an ounce of water, was injected into the external vein—from which relieved the patient immediately.

Human among Forest Trees.—Mr. Spence has lately made some important information before the Entomological Society, touching the destruction of the elm trees in Dunkirk. Other and Boulogne by an insect called Scolytus Destructor. Between three and four millions of pine trees in the German forests have been destroyed in the same manner.

Taglioni, recovery and re-appearance at the grand French Opera, has produced as usual an immense sensation. A paper says:

"The performance was for Sylphide, and never was that fanciful and spiritualized creation enclosed with more poetry and power than last night. The fall of the curtain was the signal for one of those scenes of enthusiasm of which only those who have seen a French audience at the theatre have been an admirer.

A contrivance has been used at Halifax, England, where the abruptness of the acclivities prevents the formation of reservoirs for the supply of the steam engines, with Manchester, Leeds, and the rivers Mersey and Humber, by which water is raised, and delivered at a high foot, in sufficient quantities to answer the purposes. It is done by means of a steam engine erected on an eminence, from which a shaft is sunk, to the bottom of which is raised water by the water of the Rochdale canal. This water is raised by the engine and made to flow into a aqueduct through which it passes into a basin in the town, which is thus supplied with water raised from the adjoining conveyed by artificial means, one mile and a half under ground.

The following curious advertisement appeared in the Times:—"To Independent Gentlemen.—Wanted, by a respectable modest young man, who can cook equal to any gentleman's, a Living without a Master—that is, he wishes to become a companion to some gentleman, and to his factotum. He can ride, shoot, sing, fish (but never better than his patron, whilst he is wanted), keep accounts, see that servants do their duty, do twenty other things equally necessary, in the light, and make it his whole duty to please and be pleased."

At the Zoological Gardens, the company found the elephant's enclosure much enlivened with a specimen of the huge animal a specimen of pugnacious such creature, and unmanageable and not a little laughter. The front and cakes being but scarcely dealt out to Jumbo, the new Chaser, he made a longer appeal in the amateur purveyors by passing his trunk over the railings; but the last proving any more successful, he (from dept no doubt) deliberately removed a white hat from a gentleman's head, lodged it on the shape of an opera cloque, and, having introduced the monstrous engine of his appearance throat, lolled it, if not with relish, certainly with a sang froid which the serious face of the lesser could not distort.

One of those extraordinary vegetable curiosities, the Mandrake, was this week dug up in the neighbourhood of Windsor. The extraordinaries of the legs had been cut off, the root mangled. There was a bright tuft of green vegetation in one of the thighs, but, in other respects, the appearance in form, limb, and feature to the human frame was surprisingly perfect.

Duke Charles of Brunswick accompanied Mrs. Graham in a Helion excursion on the 21st Aug. When it descended, the Duke jumped nimbly out of the car. The loss of his weight caused it to ascend, tearing away the grappling iron which caught again on a bank, and caused a jerk which threw Mr. Graham out at the height of several feet. She was severely injured by the shock, but had no bones broken—and soon after became the mother of a lifeless child. The Duke disappeared with the Duke's coat, hat and telescope, but it was afterwards recovered in a shattered state.

Mock Auctions.—Another complaint on this subject came before the Police office yesterday, in which a merchant from Alabama was the sufferer to the amount of $1,000. We will not restrain in town to prosecute the offenders, it is not altogether the business of the police to either party at present, but it may serve as a caution to others to examine the manner in which he was taken in. He happened to be going by an auction store in Dock street where an auction was going on, and was handed a large card about eighteen inches square on which was fastened two rows of cards, each about the size of a show description. Lower down on the card were several good looking cards, and on the wards the edges of the card were fastened different parcels of pencil cases, each one of which each parcel there was a silver pencil case fastened to the card. The auctioneer put up each one for so much each article, and after several bids they were knocked down to the merchant from Alabama, at 25 cents each. The purchaser delighted at getting such a bargain, as each of the articles, he thought, was worth a dollar at least, bought two cards at a time, and on examining them found that the pencil cases were worth not more than one fourth part as much as the knives on the top. This was the never set out for the purchaser, and on opening the pencil cases he found that every one of them was worthless, and not worth more than 12½ cents each. The card contained 775 articles for which he gave 30 cents each, making a sum of $232, which the auctioneer of Caldwell and Schaffer, Jr. sold second street.

The Presidential election is near at hand, and in about forty days at farthest the people will have chosen their electors, on whom will depend the result of President and Vice President, for the term of four years from the 4th of March next. The electors are requested to assemble in their respective state capitols on the 7th day of December. The following table shows the number of votes to which each state is entitled and the period when the electors must be chosen:

STATES.	No. OF VOTES.	WHEN HELD.
Maine,	10	November 7

All the States choose by general ticket, except South Carolina, which chooses by Legislature. It will be seen that Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Ohio open the poll three days in advance of the rest of the Union.

American Coin. The whole coinage of the United States, from 1793 to the present time, amounts to $61,000,000, in gold, $45,123,-980 in silver, and 73,564,513 cents and half cents. The new coinage of the eagle dollar, or ten dollar piece, will probably be executed by the 3d of March next. Within the past seven years, 3,000,000 eagles, or $30,000,000 of gold, have been coined, 6,262,500 dimes, and 10,287,-500 half dimes, and the quarter dollar is in preparation," says the Globe, "to issue there will be coin, but no trade to speak of. Silver is too bulky and unsighty for such a use. There are to be made of a mixture of silver and copper coin, the latter to be but one tenth part of the silver half dime; the cent piece will be of the size of the half dime, and the new gold quarter eagle piece will be of the size of a quarter dollar."

Paupers.—We learn from a New York paper, that no less than two hundred and thirty paupers have been shipped from New York for the different states, parishes and townships to which they belong. The guardians of the poor in that city have resolved to put an end to them with their winter's maintenance. We name this fact for the consideration of our own city, to serve as an example to our own Commissioners of the Alms-house, which ever now threatens, as we are now informed, near two thousand paupers for the ensuing year—a number which is enormous to say, easily or satisfactorily answered, as below many of this number are entitled to admission into the Alms-house, and it has been.

Forgery.—On Monday of last week, a person calling his name Pomfroy, presented a note at the Bank of Pittsburgh, purporting to be endorsed at once as a forgery. He was immediately taken into custody and lodged in prison. The name, it seems, was genuine, and it has since been ascertained that he is a resident of Onondaga county. He has a fine horse in his character, and whose connexions are highly respectable. His friends, it is said, intend to impose a plea of insanity. It is probably the first case of forgery committed under such circumstances. This plea of insanity has become mighty "available" of late, and when a villain is driven into his last corner, it is the only saved him from the punishment he deserves.—Pittsburgh Gazette.

Western Curiosities.—An Ohio paper advertises for exhibition a call with two heads, six legs, and two tails. The animal has two fore legs, one head at each end of the body; two hind legs, and three tails, each four, and two legs in the centre of its body, between which are three tails—two of the usual length, and one more than his last corner, it has only saved him from the punishment he deserves.—Boston Post.

Variety's the spice of Life,
That gives it all its flavour.

An amusing Yarnette in Dolly's Life, represents the Master of Lords under the torture of the effects of Champagne, in a Cab, driving madam, and running home to Cavendish Square by 200 canal, and expressing to the House of Commons, That underneath all he pleas the matter was.

Hurrah! dash away, each or nothing, my duke—
Your carte are prime, and so unobjectionable:
Push forward, a stranger to fear or rebuke,
And a fig for the coward who dreads a collision.

Then forward, and let off like a shot—
No matter for driving a little at random;
In London a coachman is paid not a groat
Though not—some risk of opening your conduit.

A rat roll of real American bread,
Although it be figure a little too flashy;
But who doubts its courage? and that, for speed!
Its many would venture a race with the Nubian.

The road of Reform don't agree with your pride,
Where Dan drove but Disraeli, alas! for his pony,
We think we've got a vote to ditch!—all is over,
Now with victorious torments wrings me,
Your ears, my dear, "Reform, get through it."
What shall help me? O good Heaven,
Ah! Derby—Dizzy—Hughenden Manor!
"O! to save me!—tell me!—tell me!"
Stop, coachman, stop!
(Hang it, I shall scorch till spring)—
Runoff to a most delicious thing!

Our brother over the way gave us a specimen of Lincoln county poetry a few days ago. We think we have got a verse to match it, all in our way, from New Jersey. An editor down south thinks the first line is well characterized by the dog-gerel:

When Peggy's dog her arms imprison,
Fatten only her to was heaven—
How often I should stand and turn,
To get a pat from knobs like hers!
Nashville Republ.

"You sot of a fellow!" exclaimed a poor woman to her husband, "you are always at the public house, getting drunk as hot pork while I am at home, with nothing to drink but cold water." "Cold, you jade," hiccoughed the husband, "why dont you warm it?"

One of Madam Malibran's sweetest songs is called "Night at Sea," the music by H. Hiers, the celebrated pianist. The words are pretty—ex. gr.

Heart roaring for hours;
Thought, dashing with the—
Prayers, that where thou dost roam
I soon may be.

Courage and Magnanimity.—A fight took place in one of our streets on Saturday last, between an old man and a young one. The elder man appeared somewhat the worse for several years of age—he, of course, got a sound drubbing from his junior antagonist, who strutted about like a game cock. But the victory was secured at the black eye and claret nose of the old beard.

"Is it possible, sir," said a gentleman addressing the tyro, "that you have the temerity to call out that fine?"

"Why, sir," exclaimed the young fellow, "I'm only amateur—and can whip a man as well as one as him at any time."

Sternutation.—A young medical gentleman, right from the schools, was called upon to extract a substance from the nose of a child, but not succeeding, he applied to one of his elder brethren for an instrument and sought his advice. His friend answered if he had any strong powders, medicines that produce sneezing, &c. The young doctor and he had, but they had stop ped off.

A TOUGH ONE.—They have a curious snake in Siberia of procuring the skin of the adder.—Their fat is in the greatest perfection in the depth of winter, at which time the hunter proceeds to the forest armed with a pitcher of water and some carrion meat; he deposites the bait at the foot, and climbs himself to the top of a high tree. As soon as the animal attracted by the scent, arrives at the pitcher, it immediately bounds on him and it instantaneously becomes frozen to the ground! On which, descending from his elevation with impunity, he has his prisoner with a sharp knife, cuts him transversely on the face. The snake, from the excess of pain takes to an extraordinary spring forward, runs off, and has all being but the ground part of his skin of course, leaving it a prey to the hunter!

Speaking of Guns.—Of all the torments not physical there is none more tormenting than to be a guest at a dinner party, and be obliged to tell it. "There is no knowing" how the inveterate story-teller gets into his comfortances, and to what desperate extremities he is to be driven to resist himself of the bonds of Tantalus Telegraph has a good anecdote on this subject:—"Belong the other day," says the Editor, "in a stage coach, it had become nearly night, and one day's ride was nearly at an end, when suddenly a fellow passenger broke out himself. 'There,' said he, 'I knew rain all day—nothing can fly in put me out of humour. I will consider it here record,'—and then followed an old affair which we let down a hundred pegs or so, and which he, no doubt, had repeated as much himself."

SHORT COURTSHIP.—A few days ago a duo consulate Benedict, of Pittlian, tired of single blessedness, waited upon the widow of a late well known citizen, and after the usual ceremonies of wishing to speak to her a few words. Of course she desired him to be seated. After a short colloquy, the business of the gentleman was broached—he wanted a house keeper, and had been recommended to her.

"Well," replied the dame, "what family have you?"

"Oh, only myself."

"But what house-rient have you?"

"Oh, as to that, I have a setting room and one bed room."

"Ah! but where am I to sleep?"

"Why, Madam, I had hoped that together get married first."

After a little consideration, a bargain was struck and on Monday last, the happy couple were yoked in the holy band of matrimony.

A husband complained of his wife before a magistrate for assault and battery, and it appeared on evidence that he had pushed the door against her in order to shut her out of the room on him, whereupon the counsel for the defendant said that he could see no impropriety in a husband and wife quarrelling with either.

An old Blunder Muss.—About the year 1756 or so was a warm controversy in the parish, in Durham, as to the formation of a new burying ground. The matter was long agitated in successive meetings; the inhabitants were divided, and the measure was finally carried by a small majority.

Deacon Ousel, notwithstanding his years and infirmities, attended all the meetings, and was very warm in favor of the project, and Captain Baker was violent in the opposition.

The Rev. Mr. Tyler, with his characteristic prudence, kept aloof from the quarrel. He conversed freely however, with both parties, and endeavored to assuage their bitterness by his pleasantry and good humor. One morning he met Capt. Baker. "Good morning, Capt. Baker. A fine day, Captain. Well, they had one fine old corpse to bury on the new ground last night, I do tell. They have got their new burying ground, and the old one may rest there for it the better. But one thing is certain, I'll never be buried there as long as I live."

This was too good a blunder for the parson to keep—and he entered straight to Deacon Ousen's to enjoy the joke with him.

Good morning, Deacon Ousen. A fine day, Deacon. Well you joy of your new burying ground. You were rather too many for them at last." "Why, Mr. Tyler, we out generalized em completely." "And what do you think Captain Baker says about it, Deacon" "Oh, I don't know—he's an awful wretch. He birded me say" "Why he says he'll never be buried there as long as I live." "Oh! what an obstinate cuss he is! Why, if God spares my life I will. Mr. Tyler.

LOCAL ATTACHMENT.—There is no feeling more general and more deeply rooted in the human heart, than the love for the place of our nativity. Our first affections cling to it as to the mother to the trunk which gives it nourishment. No man can forget the days of childhood spent in his native town, however just it may be, without feelings of resentment. The Frenchman regards France as the garden of the world—a few days journey, but the Yankee thinks there is no country like the highlands of Scotland. Even the Indian, when he has been driven from his home, in dreams revisits the hunting ground of his nativity and sighs. The feeling is not more common to the civilized, than the savage. Even the sailor, who ploughs the wide mankind, attachment for the place which gave him birth; and there are no principles more sacred to his heart than those which bind him to his country. These remarks were induced by a conversation remembered a few days since, between an American at this place, and a Kroomen, recently from Cape Palmas. It illustrates what has been said of local attachment, and shows, that even amidst a native African entertains a warm place.

American.—"Which place pass, Cape Palmas or Monrovia?"

Kroo.—"Cape Palmas 'pass disher place too much."

Am.—"No big store live dere, no fine cloth dere, no nothing dere 'pass Monrovia, how you dare like 'pass place too much?"

Kroo.—"You no speak true. Dere Hall, he got fine store, got fine cloth, got fine dere; you no say no proper gentleman dere, where Mr. T., Mr. J., Mr. L. dat? dat way you no speak true."

Am.—"But Cape Palmas country people 'no safely for make fine country cloth."

Kroo.—"Dat no be matter. Merica people bring nough fine clo'. And one ting he own dis Cape Palmas he pass dis place for eat cloth. Me no tink dis place he pass too much. Me like for eat cloth and he eat cloth too. Me like for eat cassada; pass he eat nough, he no down, he sleep under he own cloth, he get fat, he no lose flesh, he no eat nough, den where he come in he nough, he try to turn it. All he matter."

Among the pupils of a boarding school, not many miles from Philadelphia, one a boy not 11 remembered as being one of the best boys that ever set on the contrary was a nameless stupid kind of a boy, whose very appearance was sometimes a subject of mirth. He was not only dull in point of grammar—a study not most inviting to boys of the best capacity and diligence—but he was also undergoing the operation of the chest, the teacher undertook to punish him for some breach of the nature of the verb. "A passive verb," said he, "expresses by action or receive pain, as I strike, as Peter is beaten; now, what did 'Peter do?" The numbskull stood a moment, and scratching his head by way of assisting his wits, at length countenance possible, replied, "Well, don't know, without he behaved."

A scene of extreme horror in the Pyramids of Egypt.—Some French travellers attempting to explore the vaults of the Egyptian Pyramids, had already traversed an extensive labyrinth of subterranean passages; they were on their return, and had arrived at the most difficult part of it—a very long and winding passage, forming a communication between two apartments of opening narrow and low. The ruggedness of the floor, sides and roof, rendered the passage slow and laborious, and these difficulties increased rapidly as they advanced. The heat was excessive, which they entered became useless, from the unbreathable air, rendering it sparingly, as the passage diminished in height and breadth at length however became so constricted, that the party were obliged to crawl on their bellies. Their wanderings in these interminable passages four days in their lights of body and mind they termed them' seemed to be endless. Their alarm was very great and their patience already exhausted, when the headmost one of the party came out that he could discern the light at the end of the passage, at a considerable distance ahead, but that he could advance no further, and that it is his belief the person on to follow. Their wanderings in these interminable passages had worn out
